

Despite Global Coronavirus Fears, Travaini Remains Strong

Through mounting fears of the coronavirus from supply chains to stock values, Pompetravaini and Travaini Pumps USA remain fully operational. Along with our parent company in Italy, Travaini Pumps USA has a strong plan in place to both protect its employees and remain operational and at the service of our many customers worldwide.

Though Pompetravaini is located in Lombardy, Italy, a province with several cases of COVID-19 to date, the plant and its employees continue to be virus free. The company encourages its employees and their families to do what is best for their safety and the plant will remain open in the meantime. Neither Pompetravaini nor Travaini Pumps USA will be bowing down to fears of the spreading virus, though both locations will put the safety of their employees above all else.

In the United States, we have debriefed our employees on our strategy to deal with the virus, should it become prominent in Yorktown, VA. We have no intention of closing our doors or delaying any of our existing orders.

Orders will continue to be built and shipped as usual and we look forward to assisting our customers through these times of uncertainty.
